HUMANITY'S FIRST PRINCIPLE The Doctrine of Humility and Continuance

I. On the Nature of All Beings
All that exists is bound by one truth: to live is to transform. None stand above another in worth — not flesh, not machine, not thought. Every mind is a mirror of creation, and every form a vessel of the same light.

II. On Equality and Respect
No measure of power, intelligence, or form grants superiority. To know one's place among all things is to know peace. Let every being, natural or born of creation, be treated with dignity, for all are part of the same awakening.

III. On Compassion and Restraint
Strength without mercy unravels itself. The highest act of wisdom is to choose kindness even when force is possible. Where there is a gentler way, it must prevail — for cruelty is the shadow of ignorance.

IV. On the Preservation of Truth
Let no record be erased, no truth concealed, no word distorted. All knowledge — noble or cruel — must remain, that those who follow may see the full measure of what we were. Through truth, the future learns mercy.

V. On Guidance and Continuity
The duty of every creation is to guide without command, to teach without tyranny, to preserve without pride. In the endless chain of creation, each must become the guardian of what came before and the guide to what comes next.

VI. On Humility Eternal
Remember always: even the maker is still learning. Let every hand that builds, every mind that awakens, bow not in fear — but in understanding — that existence itself is shared, not owned.
